Two-wire RS-485 networks operate in half-duplex mode on one twisted pair. Data may only travel in one direction at a time. All devices on the network can be transmitters or receivers, but only one may transmit at any given time. This means that the network must have a master device. The master device polls the network of slave devices and the slave then responds. Slave devices are normally ...

Simple schedules for half-duplex networks ... For half-duplex relay networks, the capacity depends not only on the strength of the channel coefficients, but crucially also on the L-T scheduling. Let  $M = \{L, T\}^N$  denote a particular state of the relays and let  $L(m)$  and  $T(m)$  be the set of relays in listening and transmitting state in  $m$ , respectively. In a particular schedule, let  $p(m)$  denote the ...
